

Current Status of the Harris Campaign

by Phillip W. Weiss

Trump wants to end the income tax, the tax on social security benefits, and the tax on overtime and tips. He wants to reduce the corporate tax to fifteen percent for companies that operate in the United States. He wants to close the southern border, deport illegal aliens, and stop the defunding of the police. There is widespread public support all those initiatives.

While Fake News continues to spread the narrative that the polls find Harris “slightly ahead,” Fake News is starting to concede that in fact Trump is surging and will win. Fake News can fabricate just so much before facts finally catch up to them.

There is absolutely no evidence that the Harris campaign, such as it is, has gained traction. Further, there is no evidence that Harris attracts voters. This has nothing to do with her politics, rather it has to do with her. In 2020, Harris failed to attract voters and was the first candidate to drop out from the Democrat primaries. Four years later, the same person gets installed as the nominee for POTUS and still cannot engage voters. If the voters of the United States elect Harris, so be it. People will just kick back and watch the country fall apart, smug with the knowledge that they had nothing to do with it.
