

Trump, the Dems and the Threat to Democracy

by Phillip W. Weiss

Matt Gaetz withdrew his name for Attorney General. Trump immediately replace him with another nominee, this time a fifty-nine-year-old woman named Pam Bondi. While Fake News was harassing Gaetz over rumors of sexual improprieties with teenage girls, no such complaints are attached to Ms. Bondi.

The Dems have not learned anything from their resounding election loss. In fact, they are doubling down on their anti-American agenda. That does not surprise me. The Dems are closet communists who masquerade as mainstream politicians. Being communists, popular elections mean nothing to them. The Dems sneer at concepts such as representative democracy, popular votes, rule of the majority, consensus and compromise.

To the Dems, time is on their side. They believe that their victory is inevitable. Losing an election is merely a tactical setback. There will be other elections. But for the Dems, the real means to power is through propaganda and agitation, the goal being to incite and divide the people, sow discord, destabilize the government, and then topple it, fill the ensuing power vacuum and take over. That is their program.

The Dems believe themselves to be on a mission to wipe away a systemically unjust society controlled by greedy Nazis who are backed by stupid racist rednecks. The Dems BELIEVE this. The Dems believe that every person who voted for Trump is a Nazi.

This belief is not a mere talking point. Rather, it is the fundamental premise upon which the Dems' program is founded. If this premise is valid, then the Dems' agenda makes sense. They are embarked on a noble cause to cleanse the country of evil. But if this premise is a delusional fallacy, then the Dems' entire program becomes a jumbled and dangerous weapon meant to create needless havoc. The re-election of Donald Trump has blunted the Dems' nefarious plans. What comes after only time will tell.
